

Do you know who's behind the ship to address on your exports - with Integration Point Denied Trade Screening you will Mistakes in exporting can be costly - companies can receive fines, lose their export privileges and individuals may face imprisonment. With all the recent changes in security measures and export processing rules, it is now more important than ever to know all you can about your customers and where your products are going.

Integration Point Denied Trade Screening

Export screening can be expensive if you make a mistake and get caught. The fact is that the US Commerce Department and Customs & Border Patrol are cracking down on export screening documentation and paying more attention to what is being shipped out of the US and where it is going. With Integration Point Denied Trade Screening, companies can be assured that their products are not being shipped to restricted parties or embargoed countries.

Integration Point Denied Trade Screening is a Software-as-a-Service (SaaS) technology that allows companies to choose how to screen exports -- use the web access for individual screenings, upload customer lists into the system for batch screening, or integrate with any ERP system for multiple point screening during the order processing transaction.

Multiple Lists - Global Reach

Integration Point Denied Trade Screening provides organizations with the ability to scan numerous lists from around the globe. Our collection of control lists includes but is not limited to:

- US Bureau of Industry & Security Denied Persons List
- US Department of State Foreign Terrorist Organizations
